SF Legal Provides Faster, More Robust e-Discovery with Locally Hosted Relativity Platform

San Francisco, Calif. – With the launch of its new local hosting facility, SF Legal now provides a faster, more responsive experience for their clients using the kCura Relativity platform. Operational since mid-August, the new data-hosting facility is linked to SF Legal’s main financial district facility with a one gigabyte fiber optic connection. This far exceeds kCura’s minimum requirements for bandwidth, drive speed and processor specifications. In addition, a 15 MB pipeline enables new Relativity users to be added within minutes, rather than the hours it could take with a distant hosting facility.

After the new co-location was renovated to SF Legal’s standards, terabytes of data and millions of documents were transferred from kCura’s original Chicago hosting facility. The transition capped months of preparation and capital investment. Since the new hosting center became operational, SF Legal has loaded six million documents into client databases.

“More effective data hosting goes hand in hand with more efficient project management,” said SF Legal CEO Christian Lawrence. “We save our clients time and money by providing more information-rich and historically accurate data faster than ever.”

The new hosting facility is located in a SaS 70 Level II-certified building constructed on solid bedrock with three-foot-thick concrete walls and floors. An environmentally friendly cooling system helps lower the building’s internal temperature by circulating San Francisco’s naturally cool air. Considering that this same facility previously hosted Craig’s List and Military.com servers, SF Legal is confident that future expansion will be easily accomplished.
